As a land-grant university, N.C. A&T has a distinguished 126-year history of solving research challenges. Addressing today's great issues requires research in emerging and converging disciplines such as biotechnology, nanotechnology, energy and the environment, cybersecurity and big data. Accordingly, research at N.C. A&T extends beyond the traditional and land-grant fields of engineering and agriculture, into biomedical research, leadership development and the social and behavioral sciences as well.

Faculty and students engage in transformative interdisciplinary research and scholarship through collaborative partnerships among academic units, with other universities, and with corporate and government researchers. Through competitive research and innovation, Aggie researchers are creating new knowledge, spurring economic activity and improving quality of life for our community and the world.
